

Book Review: Patrisia Macias-Rojas, From Deportation to Prison: The Politics of Immigration Enforcement in Post-Civil Rights America. New York: NYU Press, 2016. ISBN: 978-1-479-83118-0 (Paperback). 240 Pages. $28.00.

Reviewed by James E. Sutton¹

[Article copies available for a fee from The Transformative Studies Institute. E-mail address: journal@transformativestudies.org Website: <http://www.transformativestudies.org> ©2017 by The Transformative Studies Institute. All rights reserved.]

Patrisia Macias-Rojas' book, From Deportation to Prison: The Politics of Immigration Enforcement in Post-Civil Rights America, provides rich insight into domestic border security in the Southern Arizona/Sonora region. With the escalation of immigration debates throughout the 2016 presidential campaign, the subsequent election of Donald Trump, and ongoing talk of building a wall along the U.S. border with Mexico, this is an especially timely and relevant book. It will therefore appeal both to lay audiences and to scholars working within a range of academic disciplines, including but not limited to American Studies, Criminology, Latina/o Studies, Political Science, Public Policy, and Sociology.

Macias-Rojas is an Assistant Professor of Sociology and Latin American and Latino Studies at the University of Illinois at Chicago. She received her Ph.D. in Sociology in 2007 from the University of California, Berkeley. She then spent seven years on the faculty at Sarah Lawrence College before assuming her current position in 2015. Macias-Rojas' background features previous work with the San Quentin Prison University Project and the American Bar Association in Chicago as well. She thanks several mentors and colleagues in her book's

¹ James E. Sutton, Ph.D., is Associate Professor of Anthropology and Sociology at Hobart and William Smith Colleges in Geneva, New York, where he also serves as a member of the Institutional Review Board. His academic articles have appeared in the Journal of Criminal Justice, the Journal of Quantitative Criminology, the Journal of Gang Research, Addiction Research and Theory, Qualitative Sociological Review, and Crime, Law and Social Change, among others. His teaching and research interests include state corporate offending, corrections, gangs, and the life history calendar method in criminological research.